Seasonal Affective Disorder

Are you one of the many people that suffer with Seasonal Affective Disorder, otherwise known as SAD? If, you do – then the chances are you anticipate the changing of seasons with a sense of dread. As ‘feeling blue’ and lethargy become your new norm...

So, who is impacted by SAD?

- It would seem that women are much more likely to suffer than men.
- The most common age range is from 15 years old to fifty years old.
- You may be more affected if you are already struggling with major stress or a big life event.
- There are varying degrees of SAD, so as much as a third of the population may experience some symptoms.

What are some of the symptoms of SAD?

- You may feel emotional, and more moody than normal.
- It's possible you will crave comforting foods, particularly carbohydrates.
- You may feel tired and fatigued without cause.
- In many cases, you may have a sense of just wanting to be left alone.

Why does SAD occur?

There is no fully conclusive answer as to why some people experience SAD and others do not. But one idea is that people who suffer with SAD are much more sensitive to the fluctuations in serotonin (mood regulating) levels, that occur as a result of changing levels of daylight.

Equally, if the above impact is seen, it is likely that more night-time hours also cause a higher level of melatonin (sleep hormone), in SAD sufferers. Which might account for the fatigue type feelings.

What can you try to alleviate the symptoms?

- If finances allow, you could try taking a holiday in the winter months, to somewhere that will have sunny days. January is very often one of the worst for SAD, as the anti-climax of Christmas and New Year can add to the depressed type feelings.
- Build day-light periods into every day. Whilst you may not feel like it, getting outside during the darker months is highly beneficial. Whilst a 30-minute walk each day, may not entirely cure your ills, it will go a long way to raising your spirits. Try to schedule the walk when the sun/daylight is at its brightest.
- The above options are great, but may only take you so far. Many people have experienced some success and a reduction in symptoms from using a Light Box, a form of Light Therapy. It is something you have to commit to using on a day-to-day basis, but could be well worth the effort.

If you have self-diagnosed, it is probably a good idea to see your GP. There may be things they can advise, from supplements like fish oils and vitamin D, to Cognitive Behavioural Therapy, to medications.

A Beginners Guide to

Dowsing

When we hear the word ‘dowsing’, I’m sure many of us conjure up an image of a person walking around a field with a twig shaped like the letter Y, looking for a source of water. There is certainly nothing wrong with that, as it is how dowsing began.

Over centuries dowsing evolved from an essential tool for finding water, to an art of divination. Unlike many psychic practises, dowsing is something that a layman can discover. You need to be able to fully tune-in with your intuition, but beyond that it is practise.

How do you start?

You first of all need something to dowse with. You could use traditional hazel wood twigs, but a wand, dowsing rod or pendulum would work just as well. It is really about choosing something that you feel comfortable with, so it can become an extension of your intuition.

As a beginner’s tool, you may find L-shaped rods are the easiest to handle (they can even be fashioned from metal coat-hangers). You hold one in each of your hands with the long ends pointing forwards. The rods will cross, when you discover your answer.

When you are ready, calm your mind, empty your thoughts and focus on your concern/question/object – stay relaxed. Charge your dowsing tool, with your energy and vibrations and let it show you the response.

How can dowsing be used?

- You may want to locate an object, perhaps a mislaid piece of jewellery, or even your car keys!
- It's not unheard of to use it to discover foods that may or may not be doing you any good.
- You may want an answer to a question. Should you change job, is your partner ‘the one’, are you going to move house – and so on.
- It can be a tool, when you want to decide between two different options.
- Pendulum dowsing is slightly different, and is great for when ‘yes’ or ‘no’ answers are required.

How does it work?

It is not entirely clear why dowsing works, but one school of thought is that we already know the answers to the questions, but the dowsing process allows us to unlock these solutions from our subconscious minds.

Two Angel's to Call Upon this Autumn

Akatriel

Akatriel is an angel who works very closely with God. You might sometimes hear him referred to as an Angel of Presence. Oftentimes angelic guidance can be very subtle, but with Akatriel you should be under no illusion that you are getting wisdom, as if it is was the voice of God.

The wisdom that Akatriel brings, is powerful, thoughtful and direct, but don't misunderstand, he is not overwhelming. You will still be very much able to distinguish your own thoughts and feeling.

So, when should you invoke Akatriel's assistance?

- * When you are required to lead.
- * When you need to trust your decisions, intuition and judgement.
- * In times of hardship.
- * At junctures when you need to feel in-control. Reinforcing the fact that you control your own destiny.

Akatriel is most definitely an angel representing justice. He reminds us that we all have a glory and spark with-in, and we must not let this be drowned out by comparisons with others.

Jeremiel

The 'Mercy of God' is how Archangel Jeremiel is often known, this title gives you a hint into his special qualities. He is compassionate and comforting, and above all teaches being merciful, both to ourselves and others. He is a fantastic angel to invoke when you need respect and love to rise above all else.

Jeremiel is often depicted in a deep purple, this is no accident – it is of course the colour associated with spiritual awareness.

When is Jeremiel's support most beneficial?

- * If you have a difficult and hard decision to make.
- * When you need to be able to discover a 'silver lining' in a situation.
- * To help you get over past mistakes and hurt, so you can move forward.
- * When you seek the truth and clarity.

Jeremiel is a great angel to call upon when you are at a crossroads. Whenever you are taking some sort of review of your life. If you are trying to decide what works in your life and what doesn't, whether it is a job, family, partner, money, friends or more.

Why not let these two angels help you to remove some barriers, that are stopping you positively progressing in life, at the same time as uncovering some hidden blessings!

JUDY

There have been quite a few biopic films of late, Bohemian Rhapsody and Rocketman to name a few. You might imagine then, that the film Judy would deal with Judy Garland's most famous period, in her Wizard of Oz days. But, in fact the film details a period thirty years on from then, when it's fair to say she was exhausted by the fame of being a superstar.

The Cast:

Renée Zellweger plays Judy Garland. It is never easy casting such an iconic person, and as such Renée had to endure several hours a day in the costume and make-up departments, being made-up to look like the star.

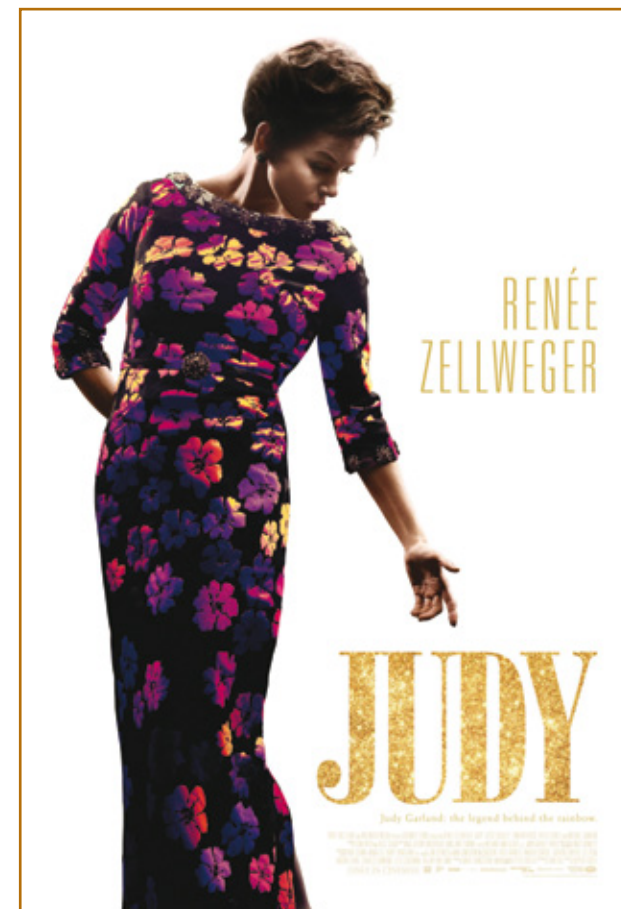

Of course, when you think of Renée Zellweger, many of us will jump immediately to Bridget Jones. But she has had an illustrious career, outside of that pink & fluffy role. For example, she was an Oscar winner for her role in Cold Mountain.

It is natural for you to assume that playing Judy Garland will require the actress to be able to sing. Renée is no stranger to that either, having sang in the film version of Chicago in 2002.

Also starring is Rufus Sewell, who you might know from Victoria, as her third husband. Finn Wittrock plays her fifth husband! Judy's daughter is acted by Bella Ramsey (Game of Thrones). Jessie Buckley – who we featured in a previous Free Spirit magazine for the film Wild Rose will also star, as will Michael Gambon (Harry Potter).

The Story:

The film will focus on the year of 1968, at a time when she was due to appear in the 'Talk Of The Town' in London, to sold-out audiences. At this point she had literally been working for forty-five years, she was fragile and fatigued. Her main desire was to spend time with her children, back home.

Film Poster & title courtesy of Pathé / BBC Films

You can see from the trailer, that life was difficult – she new how to charm her musicians, but she clashed with 'management'. She was still warm and witty, and loved nothing more than reminiscing with friends, and being adored by her fans.

Trailer/Release:

The film will be released in the UK on the 2nd October 19. There is already an air of Oscar buzz around the performances. <https://tinyurl.com/fsjudy>

Gossip:

Liza Minnelli, who is Judy Garland's daughter in real-life, stated on Facebook: 'I do not approve nor sanction the upcoming film about Judy Garland in any way.' She made the statement to clarify things that had been said in the press about her collaborating, but doesn't appear to state why she doesn't approve of the film.

PIONEERS OF MODERN SPIRITUALISM: EMMA HARDINGE BRITTEN (1823-1899).

BY PSYCHIC READER JOHN,
PIN: 5152

The Early Years

Emma Floyd was born in the East End of London in 1823, daughter of a sea captain, she had a lonely childhood. In her autobiography she recalled that she had never felt young, joyous or happy. She preferred her own company to that of other children and she favoured wondering through the countryside alone. Often among monastic ruins or churchyards, where she sometimes saw spirit forms. Many people thought of her as a wayward child, and were alarmed at her ability to foretell future events, or describe their deceased relatives. She was also a very gifted musician and showed promise of developing into a fine singer.

The precocious psychic abilities of Emma attracted the attention of an occult society, and she was persuaded to join them as a clairvoyant and magnetic subject. Little is recorded or known of this period in her life, but it is thought that it was through this association that she met a member of the influential Hardinge family and adopted the name.

The Music Years

In 1834, at the tender age of 11, Emma's father passed to spirit, leaving the family in a bad way financially. She was then obliged to earn her own living as a pupil and teacher of music. Her piano playing showed such exceptional talent for her age, that the means were found to send her to Paris to continue her studies. A member of the famous Erard family of piano makers allowed her to practice the piano in his warehouse so that his customers could hear. To everyone's surprise, Emma was able to play any piece they requested, even if they had not made the request out loud. Fearing that her daughter was being used by satanic forces – Emma's musical career was abruptly terminated.

Acting Next

Emma took up acting and was offered a contract with a theatrical company in Paris. This venture was a failure, but it led to her being invited by an American theatre manager to join his company in New York. She agreed, but only on the condition that her mother, to whom she was devoted, could accompany her to New York. Despite favourable reviews she received in the press, Emma was given smaller and smaller parts and eventually was cut out of the bills altogether. Causing her to fall out with her new manager.

Mediumship

Although this was a very difficult period for Emma, she came into contact with a couple who were spiritualists, and was persuaded to visit a medium. Her first visit hardly proved an auspicious beginning to what was to be her future career. Emma had been reluctant to go and when she heard the spirit communication by a process of table rapping, spelling out a message which seem to speak ill of the Christian religion in which she was raised, she fled.

Later Emma met another medium and her attitude changed when she had a very impressive sitting. Through the mediumship of Miss Ada Hoyt (later Mrs Coan). She became converted to spiritualism. Going on to develop psychic powers in her own person and sitting publicly for the Society of Diffusion of Spiritual Knowledge of New York. She was able to furnish one of the best attested cases of spirit return from the early history of spiritualism. The mail steamer Pacific sank in the high seas. A member of the crew possessed her body in trance, and disclosed the fact of the tragedy. She was threatened with prosecution by the owners of the boat when the story was made public, but it was found to be true.

Her mediumistic gifts included clairvoyance, automatic writing, psychometry, occasional healing, prophecy, as well as inspirational and trance speaking. Sometimes the table at which she sat would rise into the air and when she played the piano, it beat time to the music. She gave numerous sittings and was even consulted by the police to help them solve baffling cases.

Christian Spiritualism

Emma's contract with the theatre company was, by this time, about to expire. She began once more teaching music and was offered rooms for that purpose in the premises of The Society for the Diffusion of Christian Spiritualism. In return for the use of the premises, she edited the societies journal 'The Christian Spiritualist', thus gaining experience in the publishing business. She also gave many sittings and acquired a reputation for being a brilliant medium.

Kate Fox, one of the famous Fox sisters, gave séances in the same building, and Emma became acquainted with her. After a time, she felt the need for a change from this way of life, and her spiritualist friends tried to persuade her to become a rostrum lecturer. The idea of being a female preacher seemed shockingly unladylike. Despite her apprehension, she was persuaded to speak at a public meeting. As soon as she stepped onto the stage, she fell into a state of trance. The lecture of which she herself remembers not a word, was a great success and thereafter she always delivered her speeches in trance.

The Lecture Circuit

Fame as a speaker spread rapidly for Emma, she was invited to lecture in many places. Her first invitation was to a small country town called Rondout. On her arrival, she was horrified to learn of the persecution of other visiting mediums. They had suffered at the hands of the local inhabitants, whom had pelted them with stones and rotten eggs and driven them out of town. On the way to the meeting, she was hardly reassured when she saw her host arm himself with pistols. When she began to speak, her worst fears were realised. She was abused and shouted at by an unruly mob who followed her back to the house where she was staying. Undaunted, she asked her host to arrange for the use of the courtroom for another lecture the following evening. This time the audience listened with respect. Emma had the satisfaction in later years of seeing Rondout become a stronghold of spiritualism.

The Travelling Years

This was the beginning of a long series of travels. During the next thirty-five years Emma toured the whole of America, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand. Lecturing and conducting services, introducing spiritualism to many places where it had been unknown before. Travel was often difficult and the weather conditions harsh. She often encountered hostility and even physical violence. On one occasion a stone was thrown through the window of the hall where she was speaking. On another, a lecture had to be cancelled because a mob had threatened to lynch anyone attending. The south of America was particularly hostile to spiritualism because spirit opposed slavery. Emma also took part in the campaign to elect Abraham Lincoln, who was himself interested in spiritualism.

Eventually Emma's mother was able to persuade her to give up this arduous life and return to England. When she arrived in London, she found herself once more called upon to take up a round of lecturing engagements all over the country. During this time, she also found the resources to write a book called Modern American Spiritualism, setting out the history of the movement from its beginnings in the 1840s. When she returned to America where her book was to be published, she met her husband, Dr William Britten. Throughout the years of their marriage he supported her in her work and accompanied her on her further travels.

By James Coates - Photographing the Invisible: Practical Studies in Spirit Photography, Spirit Portraiture, and other Rare but Allied Phenomena, printed in America in 1911 by The Advanced Thought Publishing Company, Public Domain, Wikimedia.

Organised Spiritualism

By the 1880s spiritualism was becoming more organised, and in 1887 she set out, in the Two Worlds Magazine, a proposal for a new national organisation to bring a greater sense of unity between spiritualists throughout the country. A conference was convened in Manchester, which led to the formation of the Spiritualists' National Federation which later became the Spiritualists' National Union (SNU), under which name it functions today with educational programs for mediums at home and abroad, among its many activities.

Seven Principles

The union did not at first draw up any sort of creed or declaration of its beliefs, since many of its members felt this would restrict the individual's freedom of thought. Without such a declaration, it was impossible for it to become a legally recognised body to acquire land and premises. Accordingly, the seven principles were drawn up, based on words received through the mediumship of Emma Hardinge Britten. It is these principles that form the bases of spiritualist teaching. Liberty of interpretation was then, as now, allowed to all.

Publications

Emma was the author of many publications, for example: Modern American Spiritualism (1870), Nineteenth Century Miracles (1884), The Faith Fact and Frauds of Religious History (1879) and The Wildfire Club (1861). She also acted as a translator and editor on a number of other projects. In 1872, Emma attempted to start a magazine, The Western Star. She also wrote a number of musical compositions and songs under the nom de plume of Ernest Reinhold.

The last public engagement that Emma attended was to unveil the stained-glass window of the Salford Spiritualist Church. Although weakened by old-age and by her many years of toil, she rose to the occasion with her customary vigour. The enthusiasm of the congregation proved the love and respect in which she was held.

A Pioneer

As a pioneer Emma had witnessed the birth of the modern spiritualists movement and had fought to win acceptance for its truth, oftentimes in the face of bitter hostility and through many hardships. She had helped to consolidate it into an organised movement united by simple but profound principles to which all its followers could subscribe.

Unlike many of the early pioneers of the movement who retained their association with other churches, Emma saw spiritualism as a new religion which would sweep away the dogmas and superstition of the old-line faiths. Her understanding and that of the people who spoke through her, was too wide to be encompassed within any one creed. The subjects of her lectures ranged widely over many different philosophies and she was, in fact, involved in the founding of the Theosophical Society, although her loyalty to spiritualism was unwavering.

Emma Hardinge Britten has been accused of attacking Christianity, but her intention was never to criticise destructively, rather to seek to find a firm foundation of truth upon which spiritualism could rest and not be shaken.

Sadly, Emma Hardinge Britten passed to the spirit world in October 1899. And these are her own words, received after her passing:

*"Speak for her now, my day is done.
I have striven for the cause. Humanity has been my congregation and the world has truly been my parish. I would urge you onward and upward toward the realisation of the brightest hopes of the oldest pioneers of modern spiritualism."*

Reader Profile

Mel

PIN: 4455

Mel is a spiritual medium, empath and clairvoyant. She is a third generation psychic and has been seeing and feeling things since she was a child. Mel is from a Turkish gypsy background and has been giving readings for five years now.

When clients have a reading with Mel, they can feel the energy of comfort and love. Mel has a very understanding nature, she uses her energy to translate the feelings and thoughts of the past, present and future for both you and any others you are enquiring about.

Like psychic reader Ellie, who is Mel's mother, she has a special affinity with the animal kingdom, and is happy to connect with your beautiful animals. Mel can feel, sense and use her third eye to connect with her spirit guides. She exudes a warm energy and understanding whilst offering much comfort to the clients that call her.

Mel also offers past life readings; this style of reading is best embarked on when you are ready to feel and hear what has gone before. It is a great style of reading for unblocking situations, especially if you feel you are making the same mistakes over and over in this lifetime.

One of Mel's other specialties is dream interpretation, she uses her energy to see what the dream means for you, and to deliver any messages from your angel and spirit guides. When you tell her the dream details, she will connect with her third eye and look deep into the dream for special significances that are important for you to know.

Another of Mel's gifts is love and relationship readings, she is often asked questions about soul mate and twin flame connections. She is skilled at getting to the bottom of your feelings, but also the feelings of those around you. Her hope is to provide clarity around the situation, so you can feel clear in your choices moving forward.

If you are in need of spiritual guidance, then don't let Mel's young years dissuade you from calling, she has an amazing connection, and will gladly guide you and provide messages, if you are ready to hear them.

Astrology

with our expert

Carol Day

Welcome to Free Spirit's in-depth horoscopes for October 2019.

Arians are all loved-up this month. Singletons have a song in their heart, and partners may be swaying to that timeless Cohen music: Dancing to the End of Love. Mars enters your love sky on the 4th joining the Sun and Venus, which shows personal popularity is high. This magical climate urges you to resurrect those great ideas and with Mars in your upper chart with 80% of the planets, it's all systems go with Career and Money!

Venusian star folks will be spoiled for choice on the career front, as your health/work sky is very powerful until the 23rd. Health-wise, enjoy, but watch the diet/wine intake at key work parties, and get enough rest. Now for some super news, love planet Pluto moves forward on the 3rd, he also invites Mercury to the party and Venus joins the dance on the 8th; then the Sun goes to the ball on the 23rd, you begin a golden year of love and romance!

Gemini's are still enjoying life as your fun/children and creativity sky is sending you happiness vibes. This brings many side benefits, social popularity, the scholarly and spiritual side is enhanced and you are worry-free. The health/work planet Pluto moves forward on the 3rd backed by Mercury & Venus and is ultra-powerful when the Sun joins in on the 23rd. Work is pleasure and love planet Jupiter is bathing you in stardust.

Libra, it's your time to shine. It's Stage – Lights – Action! It's time to take centre-stage in your arena of life. You're still on a yearly fun-pleasure high until the 23rd, which is not only good for indulging the body but also for getting in shape. The Sun enters your money sky on the 23rd and with Pluto, Mercury & Venus already insitu you begin a yearly financial peak. Mars (Love) bathes you with starlight. Get ready for the Good Life!

Your Spiritual house is strong until the 23rd, it seems that you can further the career by linking with charities and altruistic activities. It also shows your spiritual progress is the career this time – your mission. On the 23rd the Sun (career) enters your own sign offering great career openings. Venus helps you look successful and gives you beauty and grace. Jupiter (money) moves forward, and the Moon visits your money sky twice. Prosperity!

With your love/career planet Mercury in your spiritual sky from the 3rd onwards, and Venus there from the 8th, the message this month seems to be, get right spirituality and health, career and love will take care of themselves. It is a period of internal growth, as you enter a very spiritual phase. The internal precedes the external, which manifests as future external growth. Saturn (money) is moving forward – so, watch the earnings rocket.

Your home/family sky is still powerful this month. It's further boosted by career planet Mars when he enters on the 4th, showing that the home/family is the mission for October. When you get the home base in order, and are in a place of emotional harmony, the career takes care of itself. The Sun enters your fun sky on the 23rd and you begin a yearly pleasure peak showing happy money earnings. The children in your life are amazing.

With career planet Venus and Mercury in your home and family sky, the message of the month is to improve emotional harmony. Get the family situation right and finance and career will fall into place naturally. Financial offers can come knocking on your door. Family support is strong, you can even earn from home. Leo's have property on their minds just now, are you thinking of moving and/or buying a new home?

Virgo your ship has come home. The Sun's in your money sky, and you're still in a yearly financial peak until the 23rd. Early October shows ruler Mercury in your money sky, causing financial favours of bosses/parents. While Venus helps you with the beauty business. Mercury/Neptune gets up close and personal from the 3rd, there is harmony with the beloved from the 14th-16th. After the 23rd you're starry-eyed with romance. Enjoy!

Your friendship sky is flying high, and has been all year with Jupiter being there to support you. It seems there's a party going on as Venus links up with Jupiter. Mercury moves in on the 10th and on the 23rd the Sun enters your friendship sky too. A powerhouse of harmony and this is where your fondest hopes come true. Then good career progress by the 23rd, when your focus shifts to friendships – the key to abundant success!

Just as your career is becoming most prominent, Pluto your career planet starts moving forward on the 3rd – perfect timing. The career sky is powerful all month. Mercury enters on the 3rd, Venus moves in on the 8th, and when the Sun links in on 23rd you begin a yearly career peak. The Sun also blesses a meeting of minds in love/romance and the lure of powerful business people. It seems the cosmos is willing your success.

Pisces, your religion, philosophy and higher education sky has been prominent all year, but especially in the month ahead. Money planet Mars spends October in your spiritual sky, which means you focus on the money needs of others. Your intuition prefers 'miracle' money over 'natural' money, and favours the supernatural rather than the natural supply. Doing right leads to feeling right, health and energy are excellent. A happy month!
